Foreword

This book is the result of over ten years research into the Mereness ancestral line of my mother, Fanny Gertrude Mereness Smith 1873-1958. She would reminisce and tell me stories of her childhood. She had a wonderful memory and knew the names of many of her relatives and close ancestors. With these names I was able to begin my search.

I went to the Library of Congress and National Archives in Washington, D. C. but was disappointed in that I was unable to find many Mereness listed in their records. The family genealogy had never been researched. So I began with what little information I had. My sister, Lucille Virginia Smith 1904-1981, wrote letters to relatives she knew and obtained some information. I was certain that there must be many wonderful people like my mother among the Mereness who had not been recorded. Since they were not listed in any of the existing genealogies, the only way to find them was by writing letter and hopefully I could find help.

I wrote over 500 letters in a two-year period enclosing self-addressed stamped envelopes for the convenience of a reply. I received about a 17% return, meaning 83% of the recipients were not interested. Even when I wrote for further information few replied. But I was pleasantly rewarded by those who joined me in the research. I paid for some of the early history but most was contributed.

My research disclosed that the name was originally spelled "Marinus" but around 1700 the name became Anglicized in New York state and spelled according to its sound. Several branches of the family began to spell it "Mereness" and one branch which settled around Oneonta began to spell the name "Moreaus." But no matter the spelling it was the same family, having its beginning in Alsace-Lorraine and Holland and coming to New York state with the Palatines. One branch of the Marious went into New Jersey. Most of the Marinius were members of the Dutch Reformed Church but some were members of the Lutheran Church. It is because of these early church records that I have been able to trace our ancestors.

I have made an effort to trace and list the families according to their descent. However, some of the names I have been unable to show their relationship with early members. Possibly some descendant will be able to show this connection. I included in the indexes the known dates to make it as easy as possible for other researchers to continue the lineages or to link the ancestors with other families. There is an unlimited field for continuing the research of those families into which the Marinius-Mereness-Moreaus married. I only wish that I had time to continue this research into the other families. This is the second book I have written on my mother's ancestors; the other being a basic research into the other families from which she descended, the Bingham, Hathrop and Starks, Scudders and many others.

The American lineages in this book contain a total of 3,284 names. Of these 208 are Marinus or a variation of that spelling. They have 6,114 listed descendants by other names. The Mereneas total 711 and they have 893 listed descendants by other names. The Morenus total 197 and they have 103 descendants listed. Altogether, there are 2,113 Marinus-Mereneas-Morenus and their descendants listed. In addition there are 284 names in the Kindred Families.

The Holland lineages contain 49 persons named Marinus or a variation of that spelling. The Belgium list contain 40 Marinus. There are other Marinus in Belgium and Holland but I could not find anyone interested in giving me their names. Perhaps someone can continue this research in Belgium and Holland.

This book is about people who came, settled and built America and made America the great nation it is today. The Marinus-Mereneas-Morenus were mostly farmers, church-going, hard-working and honest Americans. They defended America in each of its wars beginning with service in the American Revolution. We have every reason to be proud of our ancestors and relatives.

I wish to pay thanks and show my appreciation to those who have been of great help in gathering and furnishing family data and information. I wish to acknowledge, especially, the contribution of Gage D. Brereton, Watertown, WI, who sent me the lineages collected by his mother, Mrs. Elsie May Mereneas Brereton Kirkpatrick 1892-1969, Watworth, WI., over many years. We dedicate this book in appreciation of her work. Though I cannot list all of those who made contributions of family information, I include here those who made major contributions: Mrs. Kenneth Barr (Marcia Ann Mereneas), Boise, ID. and Atlanta, GA.; Gage D. A. Historical Background

I. Marinus - Merensae - Morenus

The name "Marinus" was probably derived from the Latin word "mare", the sea, as is the word mariner. It has been a family name from early times. It is a Latin proper name. Phonetically it has been spelled many ways.

Caius Marinus was a Roman general in B.C. 157. He died at 86 years of age. A Marinus, a surgeon in Alexandria during the 1st century A.D. was famous for his operations on the head. Surgery was probably as well developed there in the first century as anywhere in Europe up until the nineteenth century.

A Marinus of Tyra, a Greek geographer and mathematician, founded mathematical geography and started the use of longitudes and latitudes on maps. He lived in the 2nd century A.D. and preceded Ptolemy.

In about A. D. 300, St. Marinus, a Christian stone mason from the Island of Arbe in the Adriatic Sea off the coast of Dalmatia, fled persecution by the Roman Emperor Diocletian who sought to restore the pagan Roman gods and persecuted the Christians. St. Marinus escaped to the eastern slopes of the Apennine Mountains in Italy where he sought refuge from persecution and erected a small monastery on Mt. Titano which he had been given by Felicitas, a wealthy Rimini lady who he had converted to Christianity. There St. Marinus established the world's oldest republic and so imbued his people with a devotion to liberty they still cherish that he became venerated as the patron saint of San Marino. Another Marinus was from Neopolis, Samaria, and he headed the neo-Platonic school of Athens in A.D. 485.

Marinus, a Catholic bishop, established himself as a hermit at the feast of Wilparting, in the Bavarian Alps on November 15th in the 7th century. He was of West Frankish origin. Deacon Marinus was the "most competent" member of a mission sent to the catholic council of Hagia Sophia, Constantinople, in 869-870. He was born at Gallene, near Rome, and entered the service of the church at the age of twelve. He was elected pope and reigned as Marinus I from December 16, 882 to May 15, 884.

Marinus II was pope from October 30, 942 to April 946. He was a Roman priest from the church of St. Ciriacus. He promoted discipline among the clergy and the monks, restored the basilicas in Rome and helped the poor and negotiated a peace among the warring princes.

In the 19th and 16th centuries there were prominent Marinus in Holland and Flanders. Van Romerovsli Marinus (Marinus Cleszoon or Marinus des Zeeuw 1497-15), a Dutch painter; JAC Marious -1550 was a Flemish philologist. Marinus (vander goes orde Robin 1599-1639) was an English-Flemish engraver.

The name Marinus is not apparent in the early Palatine records but it does appear in the Dutch province of Zeeland in southwestern Netherlands and also in Belgium. The people in Zeeland were mostly farmers and fishermen and they belonged to the Protestant Dutch Reformed Church. They were descendants of Germanic peoples called Franks. During the 1500s the Protestant Reformation spread through the northern provinces of the Netherlands. The southern provinces, now Belgium, remained Roman Catholic. Until 1830 Belgium was included in the Netherlands.

Early Dutch records show Maerten Marinus married Davidtse Maeltje on May 30, 1595 at Bruinisse, Zeeland, Holland. In the 1600s Marinus are also recorded at Ooes, Stavenisse, Tholen and Bergen-op-Zoom in Zeeland. These towns are located in a twenty-mile area about twenty-five miles southwest of Rotterdam and it was from Rotterdam that the Palatines sailed around 1700 to America. The Marins, Marinisse, Marins and Marinussen families in Holland from 1595-1672 and later have the same Biblical names as the Marinus family who settled in the Mohawk River Valley in New York around 1710. So it would appear that these Abraham, Jan and Johannes (John), Thoms (Thomas), and Willem (William) were from the province of Zeeland and joined the Palatines when they came down the Rhine to Rotterdam. This is confirmed by early histories that report early American settlers of German extraction as coming from the Rhine River lowlands, then a part of the Netherlands. They were mostly from the cities, highly educated and wealthy.

Eight generations of Marinus-Moreness-Moreous have been in America to date. Although the spelling of the name may be different, it is the same family. Spellings and pronounciations change and there are many colloquialisms as well as variations in the names, so that one must accept such slight changes in family names in the history of genealogy.

Although American settlers bearing the name "Marines" came over with the Protestant Palatines in 1709, there were Marins in the Schenectady area as early as 1634. It has been passed down from generation to generation that the family originally came from the region of Alsace. Since they were among the Palatines who came from that region, the history of the Palatine movement and of the area from which they came is included herein.

II. The Palatine Movement

The history of the Palatines begins with the history of the Holy Roman Empire or German Empire which was the realm ruled by the emperor who claimed to be the representative of the ancient Roman Emperors and who asserted (in theory) authority over the nations of western and central Europe. It was called "Holy" because of the interdependence of the emperor and the church. It comprised in general the German-speaking peoples of central Europe.

When the Romans expanded their influence over the central European areas, the Palatines, as early as the 11th century, were given the function of exercising the royal privileges over the new domain. These domains were called Palatinates. The two principal Palatinates were the Upper Palatinate containing a part of Bavaria and the Lower Palatinate located around the lower Rhine River.

A Palatinate was a political division ruled over by a prince possessing certain prerogatives of royalty (originally an elector or count palatine) as an electorate of the Holy Roman Empire. He exercised spiritual as well as temporal jurisdiction. In medieval France and Germany he was a high judicial figure functioning with cognizance of all cases that were submitted for decision by a sovereign, corresponding to the Lord Chancellor of England. He was a lord exercising power over a province, a vassal enjoying the exercise of royal privileges over his territory.

The Palatinate was designated by the Golden Bull as one of the seven electorates overseen by a Count Palatine or palgrave (member of nobility) of the palace whose duties had to do with the royal tribunal, and who was selected from the king's comitatus (an electoral assembly of the Romans) and who later became a provincial palgrave (hereditary ruler) who exercised the king's prerogatives and managed the royal lands. The Golden Bull was published at the Diet of Nuremberg by Emperor Charles IV in 1356. The Golden Bull was so named because of its golden seal. A bull is an edict, decree or proclamation sealed with a bulla which was seal of gold used by the Greeks and early German Emperors or sovereigns. The Diet was the semi-annual meeting of the estates of the old German Empire showing the name of the city in which they met. The Golden Bull was the electoral code of the Empire, determining the prerogatives and powers of the electors and the manner of the election of the King of the Romans. The Electors of the Holy Roman Empire, seven in number, were those reigning Princes of the Empire by whose votes the Holy Roman Emperor was elected. The Golden Bull also designated the Palatinate as one of the seven electorates overseen by a Count Palatine.

The lower or Rhenish Palatinate was located across the Rhine River from its confluence with the Lauter River, about nine miles north of Karlsruhe, and extended fifty-one miles to the northeast along the Rhine in the area now known as Germany.

Alsace-Lorraine (Elsass-Lothringen), an imperial state of the German Empire, lay to the southwest of this confluence and to the northeast of France. Its capital was Strasbourg. In 1500 it came under French domination. The inhabitants were of the Teutonic German race in general, including both high and low Germans. The name Teuton or Dutch means "the people" as opposed to foreigners. The original Teutons were a Germanic tribe that appeared north of the Elbe River in B.C. 300. The race was tall in stature, fair of complexion with blue eyes and a long narrow face. These were our hardy ancestors destined to establish a long line of descendants reaching into the America of today.

During the Thirty-years War 1618-1648, the Rhenish Palatinate was completely devastated. During the War of the Spanish Succession 1702-1704, the Palatinate was again devastated. The War of the Spanish Succession arose out of a dispute about the succession of Spain on the death of Charles II in 1702, without issue. Charles II had made Philip of Anjou his heir. This uniting of France and Spain and the growth of French power was opposed by the Grand Alliance in The Hague, capital of the Netherlands, between England, Holland, Prussia and Austria and the Holy Roman Empire. The war was fought principally in Italy, the Netherlands and Germany. In 1711, after the death of Emperor Joseph of Austria, Philip of Anjou ascended the Spanish throne as Philip V. Louis XIV 1638-1715 ruled France from 1643 to 1715 and as an absolute monarch sought to become the supreme ruler of Europe by conquering all land west of the Rhine River. This Rhenish area was again devastated over 200 years later in World War I and World War II.

In 1668, England, Sweden and the Netherlands formed an alliance to oppose Louis XIV who had seized a number of Dutch towns but the House of Orange under Prince William, later William III of England, came to the rescue of the Dutch. Louis XIV destroyed the cities and farms in the Rhenish Palatinate during repeated attacks upon their borders, sometimes burning whole cities. Many of the settlers of Alsace in the Palatinate in 1671 were poverty-stricken refugees from western Switzerland where the Reformed church was the state church and the rulers were Reformed churchmen. In Switzerland they had suffered hardship, poverty and overcrowdedness. Europe was a seething cauldron and the Low Countries were the only haven of refuge for independent spirits bent on thinking their own thoughts and improving their lot in the world.

The Palatines were "High" Dutch natives of the Rhenish Palatinate of Germany known as "Pfalz" which lies in the Rhine Valley on both sides of the river. The old capital of the area was Heidelberg. Most of the residents were Protestant Calvinists, who followed the teachings of John Calvin 1509-1564, a European leader of the Protestant Reformation. They were industrious and religious, representing a cross-section of winegrowers, farmers, students, carpenters and other trades. Their principal churches were Reformed and Lutheran. This area along the Rhine and Lauter Rivers was predominantly agricultural, being devoted to raising grains and grapes. The Rhine was the principal trade route, carrying both produce and passengers.

In 1706 the Reverend Joshua Kocherdal (Kocherthal), one of the active pastors of the persecuted Palatines, led a group of forty-one people of whom fifteen were Lutherans and twenty-six were Calvinists down the Rhine River to Rotterdam, Holland. The group included ten men, ten women and twenty-one children. From there they went to Harwich, England, to petition Queen Anne to allow them to settle upon the Hudson River lands in the Province of New York.

In the spring of 1707 a French army marched into the valley of the Rhine, confiscating the vines and vegetables of the farmers and laying waste to the fertile lands. They overran Germany and on return, further pillaged and burned farm houses and again despoiled the lands. During the spring and summer of 1708 the farmers worked hard to reestablish their farms but an early, very cold and long winter came and froze the land. Also the Rhine princes were overtaxing their subjects. Thousands of the inhabitants perished for want of food, shelter and proper clothing. At the same time as this French oppression, the Protestants were being persecuted by their prince, the Elector, John William of the House of Neuburg, who had become a devout Romanist although his subjects were principally Lutherans and Calvinists.

The London Board of Trade in 1708 approved the Palatines' settlement of lands along the Hudson River in the New York Province and decided that they could be used in the production of naval stores. At that time naval stores consisted of resin, turpentine, pitch-tar and hemp. Pitch and resin were obtained by girdling pine trees. Knots of pitch-pine were roasted in kilns made of sod and the hot tar was drained off in barrels and used for caulking ships. Turpentine was made by distilling the pitch and tar residue. Masts, yardarms and bowsprits could be cut from the tall trees of the forests. Also, the settlers would act as a protection against the French and Indians. The Palatine settlers were naturalized in London and then sent to the Province of New York as the first German Colony on April 28, 1708. Included in the group were husbandmen, tradesmen, school teachers, ministers and farmers.

The trip over the Atlantic Ocean took from three to four months and sometimes as long as six months and many of the passengers died during the hazardous voyage. As the trip lengthened provisions became short and, if they should run out of bread, then only a pint of grout would be allowed each day for five persons. For those who lived through the voyage, there was still the difficult period until they could establish homes in the new frontier.

The first Palatines arriving in the New York Province settled at the mouth of the Quassaick Creek near Newburgh on 2,190 acres of land under what is known as the German Patent. They later abandoned the land as not being suitable for their purpose. They then moved further up the Hudson River Valley to settle on new lands.

It was also reported that these first Palatines came over in a ship that sailed up the Hudson River and landed just south of Kingston which the Indians called Esopus, near the present Roundout Reservation. They went ashore and built log cabins. Their supplies followed in a second ship which, failing to make contact with the settlers, continued up the Hudson to Albany where the ship's captain ultimately sold the supplies and returned down the river. Schoharie Indians are supposed to have given the settlers corn which carried them through the winter.

In the spring of 1708 a book came into the Palatine lands in Alsace describing the English colonies in America where fertile river valleys could be peaceably settled and farmed. Colonial companies were encouraging settlement of their colonial grants and possessions with glowing reports of opportunities that could be had in the new frontier. Whether because of religious persecution which was a strong factor, particularly in the region of Pfaltz from which came most of the New York state Palatine forebears, or because of the promise of new rich lands, there was a great exodus of Palatines from their farms in 1709 with the settlement of the new Province as their goal. The trip down the Rhine and over the ocean took about a year. From the farms of the Rhineland, the refugees sailed down the Rhine River to Rotterdam, Holland, and then by ship to London, England, and then to America.

All of the German emigrants who joined the migration were called Palatines. In May and June of 1709 about 5,000 men, women and children from the Palatine region were quartered in tents, houses and barns in the suburbs of London awaiting shipment to the new colony. A report made to the House of Commons stated:

In the spring of 1709 great numbers came down the Rhine and did not stop until reaching Rotterdam, Holland. Their destination was England. * * * Most of them were farmers and vine dressers, but many had trades.

The Second Palatine Party sailing from Rotterdam, Holland, on May 23, 1709 lists as passengers, "Marines and vrowen," etc. However, descendants have spelled the name Marlinus, Mereness and Morenus also.

By October 1709 more than eleven thousand refugees had settled around London awaiting passage to the New York Province. Estimates of the number of refugees in the migration has been put as from 13,000 to 32,000. Most of them came from the Upper Rhine. In the middle of October 1709 a Palatine group, joined by other Germans, sailed for New York on the ship "Globe." They settled about fifty-five miles up the Hudson River at a place they called Newburgh.

That winter ten ships were overloaded with twenty-eight hundred refugees. They cruised the southern coast of England for four months waiting for spring. Many became sick and some died. Finally, the survivors set sail for New York and after two months at sea, the first ship, the Lyon, sailed into New York harbor in mid-June. Nine of the ships carrying twenty-one hundred passengers arrived safely. Only one, the Herbert, without loss of life, wrecked on the Long Island shore.

Those who could not pay their way over, came as indentured servants bound over to the master for the purpose of working off the cost of the voyage. It appears that the "Marines" may have been under contract, as were most of the Palatines, to pay for their passage by working on the naval pitch-tar project. They had a long and arduous trip on small ships under crowded conditions but they had high hopes for their future in the colonies. After their ship arrived at the mouth of the Hudson River, they landed in New York which was a teeming city of about sixty thousand people of different nationalities and religions. The city at that time consisted mostly of what is now lower Manhattan but then rutted by cart wheels.

These German Palatines were then carried by sloops about one hundred miles up the Hudson River to settle in tents on six thousand acres of land in the Robert Livingston Patent, in the area now called Germantown, Columbia County, New York. The tents were soon replaced by log cabins chinked with clay.

The settlers girdled over one hundred thousand trees in the pine forests in an effort to pay off the cost of their passage and with hopes of securing title to the land. But dissatisfaction with their treatment and difficulties with securing title to the land impelled many of these German Dutch to move further west of the Hudson into the Schoharie River Valley. Realizing that they had been getting more heavily in debt some returned to New York City but some five hundred of the settlers went into the hill-circled valley of the Schoharie River.

One branch of the Marisus family moved across the Hudson River from New York City into New Jersey which had become known for its religious liberty. There in Bergen County land was available at Hackensack, Pompton Plains and Acquackonck for farming and it was close to the markets of the growing metropolis of New York City.

Other Marisus members and the Mereness and Moresus families moved up the Hudson River and then into the Schoharie River Valley before 1740.

At first, fifty families and then one hundred and fifty Palatine families in the fall of 1712 moved about forty miles west of the Hudson River into the Schoharie River Valley to the settlement at Weisendorf, now called Middleburg. They were led by Conrad Weiser. Thinking that this was the forty acres of land given each of them by Queen Anne, they built earth and log huts with skins for doorways and bark for roofs. They then began to clear the land for farming. One of these families was the "Marines." But on November 3, 1714 Governor Hunter sold the Schoharie lands, which the Palatines had bought from the local Indians, to Robert Livingston, Jr., son of the owner of the Hudson River patent.

and four others. They sought to collect rent or the purchase price from the settlers for their forty acres. While some purchased the land others refused.

In 1722 a number of Palatine families extended the Schoharie frontier by moving into the Mohawk River Valley about eighty miles west of Albany. A patent on land a few miles north of the Mohawk Valley was taken out by Governor Burnet in October 1723 covering 2,700 acres. He gave the Palatine families permission to purchase the lands.

III. The Marinus Family in the New York Province

Schenectady Dutch Reformed Church records show that David Marinus who married Rachel Hanse, was in the Schenectady area before 1684. This is the earliest mention of Marinus found in America.

The first mention of a Marinus in New York state census record was William Marrinus who appears in the "List of Freeholders of the City and County of Albany 1720, viz Schenectady." By 1723 the German Dutch had moved to Palatine Bridge in Tryon County and German Flats in Berkimer County. Tryon County with an area of 409 square miles was established March 2, 1772 and it was named after English Governor Tryon who had formerly governed North Carolina. But the name of the county was changed to Montgomery on April 2, 1784 after the Revolutionary War. By 1735 the Mohawk Valley had become the American Rhine. The Marinus had settled in the Mohawk Valley by 1755. Here they finally made their home after the long trip with the Palatines from Alsace.

The next mention of a Marinus in New York is found in Zenger's New York Journal 1733-1751: "Merces, Johannes - - killed by Indians July 18, 1748 at Popendahl, one mile north of Schenectady (8/1)." John Peter Zenger was a Palatine who became a famous American journalist. He had been "bound out" to William Bradford, a New York printer to learn his apprenticeship.

According to "The Mereness Family in America" (DAR records of Edith Mereness Christopher, Schenectady, New York) the Marinus family came from Amsterdam, Holland, in about 1710 and settled in New Jersey opposite the city of New York. By 1740 one branch had proceeded up the Hudson River and located at Schoharie, New York. In the Schoharie branch there were five Mereness brothers and two sisters. The first brother, Thomas, changed his name to Merenus and settled in Oneonta in about 1788. The second brother, Abraham Mereness, in about 1786 went to live in Sharon and settled at Beekman's Corner. He died there in 1824. The third brother, John Mereness (my forebear) located at Sharon in 1786 at the age of 24 years and died there in 1851. He was recruited from the Canajoharie District as a member of the Tryon County Militia, First Regiment, of New York. The fourth brother, whose name is not known but possibly was David, located at Ames, New York. The fifth brother, who probably was William, located at Oneonta. The two sisters located somewhere in the Mohawk Valley in 1755 and probably married Palatine descendants.

From the beginning of the nation, the Hudson and Mohawk Rivers have borne men and goods between salt water and the continent's heartland. It helped make the old Dutch colony into the wealthiest and most populous of states.

Indian trails where the Iroquoia moccasin tread on woodland paths yielded to settlers' wagons which creaked and bumped over log turnpikes. Gaily painted packets glided into newly sprouted towns. Canal boats yielded to iron horses and good but narrow roads. Blue-green mountains, legend haunted valleys and broad lakes with wandering rivers filled the area. Dainty white-tailed bucks and does, slender-legged came out of the pine forests to drink at the water's edge and then bounced back to the safety of the woods with their tails held high. The valleys were turned into fertile farms. Ever increasing population came by the way of the Erie Barge Canal, and then came by the railroads and better wagon roads.

The mountains were the Catskills and the Adirondacks. This was the "Leather Stocking Country" of James Fenimore Cooper. It was the beautiful land of the flogger lakes and Watkin's Glen and glades lush with ferns.

In early days Albany was the edge of this universe, a Dutch traveler would talk of his trip for months while putting his affairs in order by making a will and having prayers said for his safe passage to the Dutch churches.

There was a wilderness trading post at Tarrytown which was known as Philipse Castle. It had walls which were two-feet thick and gunports to protect it from river pirates and unpredictable Indians. Near here was the home of Washington Irving 1783-1859.

Over the countryside the schoolmaster, Ichabod Crane, and playboy, Brom Bones, fought and vied for the hand of Katrina Van Tassel. These tales were undoubtedly reminiscent of those told on the Rhine.

By Dutch sloops, specially built for travel on the Hudson River, settlers passed the cliffs of the Hudson Highlands on their way to pioneer settlements where other Dutch, German, English and French were to follow them. The sloops carried raw goods consisting of beaver skins and furs, grains and lumber to New York City and returned with finished goods for the farmers and trappers. The settlers built houses to resist the cold winters with cavernous kitchens and root cellars. The iron door latches were marked with crosses to ward off evil spirits and witches. The house was lighted with candles made from animal fat tallow. During the winter slabs of ice were sawn from the frozen river and stored in sheds under sawdust and straw for use during the summer months.

A settler had to be of hardy stock to survive the hardships and especially the cold and snowy winters. It would snow to such depths that tunnels had to be dug from the house to the barn. The settler has to be a woodman, farmer, carpenter to build his own house and barn, and a jack-of-all-trades as well.

The Hudson and Mohawk River Valleys in some places have changed very little from the wild state of that time. The valleys were overgrown with trees and woodland glades were covered with ferns. The upper Hudson River was said to be still traveled by the ghostly crew of Henry Hudson's "Half Moon." The King's Highway ran along beside the river with ever deepening ruts from oxcart wheels.

While the Catskills had gentle summits, they also had violently steep, rocky slopes leading down to valleys which were without lakes. These valleys were accessible by corduroy roads in good weather.

By 1756 the Albany population had increased to over seventeen thousand and many of these settlers were in the Mohawk Valley which was the gateway to the west between the Catskill and the Adirondack Mountains. Other settlers followed the Palatines down the valley. They cleared the land for corn and wheat fields and planted cherry and apple trees in orchards. Much of the grain was ground into flour and shipped to New York City in sacks made from hemp also grown on their farms.

The original five tribes of the Iroquois Nation were in possession of most of western New York up until the time of the American Revolution.

Here in the Mohawk Valley the Palatines had found an area similar to the Rhine Valley which they had left behind. Here perhaps the winters would be more severe but they would be free from religious persecution.

IV. The American Revolutionary War

The Battle of Oriskany

One of the most important battles of the Revolutionary War was the Battle of Oriskany which took place on August 6, 1777. When it became known in July 1777 that the British in Canada were planning to march into the Mohawk Valley and take back the farms and estates, the Tryon County farmers started to mobilize. They began patching up the forts and farmhouses along the river in preparation for the defense of their homes. The commander of the Tryon Militia was Brigadier General Nicholas Berkimer 1728-1777 of Rhinish Palatine stock. The Mohawk Valley was sparsely populated with about 5,000 white men, women and children of mainly second generation Rhinish Palatine or New Amsterdam Dutch extraction with a mixture of Scottish and Irish.

Then the British started to march down the valley, every Tryon County man, from sixteen to sixty, was ordered by General Herkimer to gather at Fort Drayton and answer the winter call on Sunday, August 3, 1777. There they formed the Canajoharie and Palatine Regiments. Each soldier was equipped with a flintlock, powder, lead, a knife, bread and cheese to carry in his knapsack.

Fort Stanwix to the west of the Mohawk Valley was manned by Colonel Peter Gansevoort of Albany and Lieut. Colonel Marinus Willett with 750 men. Lt. Colonel Barry St. Leger with a mixed force of Tories, Indians and regulars, consisting of about 1,700 men moved toward Albany from Oswego on Lake Ontario where they planned to join General Burgoyne. On August 3, 1777 St. Leger's troops beleaguered Fort Stanwix.

On Monday August 4, 1777 General Herkimer began a march to relieve Fort Stanwix with some 860 men recruited from Tryon County. He rode a white horse followed by 600 men in double file, a train of oxen and the remaining 200 men in double file. Some 60 Onondaga Indians scouted for them. In this group were two corporals named William Merceness and John Merceness, and another corporal named William Morneau. By nightfall the Tryon County Militia had made camp at Stirling Creek, ten miles west of Fort Drayton. On Tuesday, August 5th they passed by the fort at Deerfield and by Thursday night they had reached the banks of Oriskany Creek, only seven miles from Fort Stanwix. (Oriskany is the Oneida Indian word for a field of nettles). Oriskany is about seven miles northwest of Utica in Oneida County.

On Wednesday, August 6th the Tryon County Militia came to a deep, wooded, rocky ravine of Oriskany Creek. Col. St. Leger had sent out an ambush of Indians under Joseph Brant, English educated chief of the Mohawk Tribe, and Tory troops in the early morning hours. About 200 Senecas were waiting behind trees on both sides of the corduroy road which crossed the ravine at Oriskany Creek. Just beyond the rim of the ridge on the western end of the ravine British troops waited. As the Tryon County Militia began to cross the creek, the British opened fire and the Indians fell upon them. Six hundred and fifty men of the militia fought back in a vicious mele with gun-balls, knives, clubs and fists for forty-five minutes. General Herkimer's men refused to panic under the heavy fire. But a sudden heavy rain drove the British and Indians back into the woods for cover. The Oriskany Creek washed red with blood. Col. Marinus Willett's head came to their rescue but, in the meantime, the Indians had fled and the British followed them in retreat. Within two hours and by mid-afternoon the battle was over. Between 150 and 200 of the militia had been killed and another 50 were wounded. Corporal William Merceness was among those killed. General Herkimer had been mortally wounded. The tired but victorious fighting men and walking wounded who had survived began the long march back to their homes.

Because the Tryon County Militia heroically stopped St. Leger and forced the withdrawal of the British troops to Canada, General Burgoyne's entire battle plan collapsed at the Battle of Saratoga where he surrendered.

V. John and William Mereness in the Revolutionary War

Both John and William Mereness fought in the Battle of Oriskany on August 6, 1777. John Mereness, born on March 12, 1762, was 15 years old at the time. 1/ He was a private in the First Regiment of the Enlisted Men of the Tryon County Militia. The First Regiment was recruited from the Canajoharie District of New York. John received a land grant (Bounty Rights) for his service. He married Margaret Lawrence 1763-1842 in 1788. He died on April 21, 1851. 1/ 2/ 3/

Corporal William Mereness was born in 1754 at Schoharie, New York. He was 23 years old at the time of the Battle of Oriskany. 1/ He, too, was in the First Regiment of Tryon County Militia. 3/ He married Margarette De Trieux (Truax) 1773-1859 in 1789. He died at Oneonta on January 23, 1816. 1/ 2/ 3/

Corporal William Mereness was killed at the Battle of Oriskany. The monument erected on the battlefield site which is now a National Park bears his name among those killed as "Corporal Wm Mereness." Government records read: "Corporal Wm Mereness was killed on August 6, 1777 in the battle of Oriskany." 1/ 3/ Also listed as "Marious, Wm, Corpl."

VI. Thomas and William Morenus in the Revolutionary War

Thomas Morenus was born on August 7, 1756 in Schoharie, New York. He was a private during 1778-1780, first in Captain Isaac Rogert's Company of Colonel John Harper's Regiment; afterward in Captain James Hogan's Company in Colonel Peter Vrooman's Regiment. In August 1780 he went out of the Schoharie County fort to help guard harvesters against the Indians and was captured and taken to Quebec where he was imprisoned. He joined a plot to escape by blowing up a magazine but he was caught and with his colleague flogged with a cat-o'-nine-tails. He was the only one who survived the ordeal, and after 18 months imprisonment he escaped and returned home. The rest of his life his back bore the scars of the flogging. This account was submitted by a descendant, George Winthrop Fairchild, and is recorded in the Register of the SAR Empire State Society. Thomas Morenus died August 7, 1826 in Oneonta, New York. 1/

William Morenus was a corporal in the Revolutionary War serving in the First Regiment of the Tryon County Militia. He was born in 1754 in Schoharie, New York. He married Margaret Truxx 1773-1859 on February 9, 1791. Her ancestors were Walloons of Belgium ancestry. He died on January 23, 1816 in Oneonta and was buried in the Riverside Cemetery there. He was a brother of Thomas Morenus 1756-1826. 2/
